Notes: The Basic Rate Tax Change – effect on Gift Aid

Gift Aid is a mechanism by which charities can reclaim tax paid on the donation. Therefore the amount you can claim is directly linked to the basic rate of tax. As the basic rate of tax has decreased, the amount that can be claimed by charities in Gift Aid has dropped from 28p to 25p on the pound.

However, the Government has decided to provide a Transitional Relief to help charities adjust to the drop in their Gift Aid income. This means that although the amount of money that can be reclaimed by charities has fallen, the actual amount they receive will remain the same, i.e. 28p, until the end of the 2010/2011-tax year.

Higher rate taxpayers can still claim the difference between basic rate tax and the higher rate tax they pay. While the higher rate tax has not changed, the change to basic rate tax means that higher rate taxpayers can claim back more for themselves. Alternatively, they may wish to increase the amount they give to the charity.
